Back at the barnyard treasure hunt

This section is optional, but it's also the best part, so stay. Below is a complete list of clues we used in the inaugural Egg Hunt, along with explanations for each of them. Feel free to use this for inspiration or steal our ideas wholesale.

- This bad egg has reached rock bottom behind a dead slinking lion. Everyone assumed that 'lion' meant toilet and started by searching behind public toilets, but the egg was actually hidden at the bottom of a rock behind a lavender bush (which happened to be dead and smelly).
- Red Hot Words will reveal the location (T.11)Our first musical reference. Picking only red words from the border reveals red hot chili peppers album Blood Sugar Sex Magik. Trail 11 (T.11) is under the bridge, so we stuck an egg on the underside of a small wooden footbridge. Simple, no?
- Find Cabot's marquee – put behind bars – watch your stepA tricky one, this. The first step is to find a plaque at the base of the Cabot Tower that mentions the Marquis. Put him 'behind bars' standing on the other side of a nearby door and looking through the bars. Then just watch the steps by the door and the egg will be found!
- I am tough and wet and has an egg on my facelt is vaguely rude sounds, but in the end a very simple clue. The egg is glued to the face of a large rock in the center of the pool of water. The rock is both hard and wet. Nothing more than that.
- Persimmon says: don't worry, about the thing Bob Marley's lyrics from the song Three Little Birds. We draw three birds in one of the trees on the map, and on the matching tree hung three bird feeders in real life. The egg was behind them. Oh, and it's a Persimmon tree.
- I'm an antichrist, what else am I? Last musical reference. According to the sex pistols, I'm an antichrist, I'm an anarchist. The symbol of anarchy on the map leads to the place where the actual symbol of anarchy colored with spray can be found—the egg is next to it.
- Atbash legend tells of the devil's egg: HFNNLM Z WVNLMAtbash is a simple type of replacement code in which A becomes Z, B becomes Y and so on. Deciphering meaningless letters is spelled SUMMON A DEMON, which is associated with the thought of a devil's egg. Ooh, symbolism. In any case, the point is to look for the pentagram symbol on the map and go there to find an egg hidden among a circle of five trees.
- The schoolboys have desecguous queen Elizabeth's back entrance! This is a fun lead that stuffs a lot of information into a cheeky one-line story that tells a little story. At the border of the park is an independent school for boys called Queen Elizabeth Hospital School. We stuck an egg on the graffiti-laden back door of the school playground. Simply.
- Where are you? Romeo follows Quebec to the white brick Shakespeare quote is just for taste, to conceal romeo's true identity as part of NATO's stepmother. Romeo follows Quebec suggests Q follows R, and scan the QR code we set by map shows Martha and I jump out of a giant peace sign. Find the appropriate peace sign on the map, and there's an egg — stuck on a white brick, of course.
- Find Vigenere's key: cvpkxe twnvftbgn dfvumjfcuxfja umvcxvesvA hard track, er. The Vigenère code encodes text with a keyword, so the first step is to find the key. The phrase 'Vigenere's Key Is Brick' is hidden in a visible place among random words around the trace sheet boundary. Typing mixed letters plus the keyword Brick into an online decoder reveals a message, behind a collected sculpture of consciousness. Quite simply from this moment on – there is a large sculpture with that name right at the beginning of the hunt. We hid the egg on the wall behind him. Phew.
- Puzzle masters discover a secret after hearing the maritime signalMy personal favorite clue. Masters of puzzles – also known as Martha and I have hidden the appropriate eggs on our person. The naval signal refers to the maritime flags in the drawing of the ship. Flags spell EGGMAN, which is the password to encourage me or Martha to reveal ourselves publicly. In a good way.
- 01000011 01001111 01001101 01010000 01001111 01010011 01010100 It reveals the word COMPOST in binary translator. We hid the egg on the side of a large compost bin. It was difficult to do something more complex that involves binary because you can't code anything for a very long time or it gets too clunky.
- At the intersection, egg and white on a large wooden fork We found a distinctive tree with a fork right next to the part of the forest zone that is divided four times like an intersection. The tree was marked in white, hence the vaguely food-themed egg/white/fork text. We drew wrought wood on the map in the correct location and stuck an egg there. Done.
- Here come the dots, titled Jacob's Wells RoadContaminant signals to look for dots on a particular road on the map, which along with several election markings on the road make up a phrase in Morse code. When he decoded it says JWRBUSSTOP, and we stuck this egg on Jacob's wells road bus station. Added self-help nerd bonus: here come the dots's anagram of morse code. drops of mic
- A little blue bird told me to #EGGNO15Referring on the Twitter logo, this clue requires hunters to search for a #EGGNO15 hashtag to find a solitary tweet. A trainee angry about alfresco ASBO art as Alan's alias aggressively changed. Albumen next door. Roughly translated from antipathetic alliterations, it means Alan Sugar (host of UK Trainee) is antipoyed that vandals misrepresented his name. We stuck an egg for a large piece of graffiti that had a SUGER on it. I think this one was a little too esoteric because it's the only lead no one realized. Oops.
- Locating the grand prizeA bakery dozen branches to name a hideout. Cabot knows it's somewhere betwixt Dundry and Long Ashton.As as well as 15 main tracks, we've also pulled into the bike locking location central to the entire hunt. Bakery the branches indicate a 13-branched drawing of a tree in the corner of the map, which is associated with the word Wellingtonia, which is the type of recognizable giant redwood tree in which we hid the lock. Cabot knows that part of it requires hunters to head for the top of the Cabot Tower and look at the park. Right between the arrows pointing to Dundry and Long Ashton lies the Wellingtonia tree. The lock was hidden halfway through the tree, securely tied to a large branch so it could only recover with the correct 4-digit code.
- Combination lockCombine the secret word of each zone to unlock the reward. If all eggs are found correctly, the accompanying letters are spelled three words. One for each zone: BRACE, SCORE and GROSS. These three words are all old names for numbers: 2, 20 and 144. When they multiply, you get 5760 – a combination of locks. This was the final piece of the puzzle, and the winning team was rewarded with a large basket of chocolate snacks and as much respect as they could. heartcraftythings From your favorite backyard games like freeze tag to the ever-popular Uno cards, Play-Doh and Kinetic Sand, there are plenty of great activities for kids to participate in. Another must-do for each parenting list? Scavenger hunt. The great thing is that hunting vultures for children does not require much at all. They are simple, inexpensive and can often be done using things you already have at home. In addition, time does not matter at all, since you can choose a hunt that is specifically directed to be done inside or out - and hunting vultures can also add an ever-welcome educational element to children's playing time, usually (and this is the best part) without children even realizing it. While these treasure hunts may feel like a throwback activity, the vulture hunting ideas we found are anything but old-fashioned. Whether you're looking for an interactive way to instill a love of reading, add even more fun to a football game, or find a few ways to increase children's sensory experiences, we cover you.
